

MILLIONAIRE ACCUSES HIS WIFE AND HARLEM RECTOR.

Commodore Watt Tells of Late Visits of Clergyman to His Yacht After He Had Retired, and Says He Was Threatened with a Pistol.

The application of Mrs. Adele Watt, the wife of Archibald Watt, the millionaire yachtsman and owner of the steam yacht American, for $250 a week alimony pending the trial of the action for an absolute divorce she has brought against him, and for a counsel fee of $2,500, was on the calendar in the Supreme Court before Justice Hall today.

Mr. Watt denies all of his wife's charges and makes several in return. He says she obliged him to write a letter at the point of a pistol, and tells of late visits from a prominent Harlem rector, to whom he objected.

Mrs. Watt was married on June 13, 1936, the officiating clergyman being the Rev. Dr. Vandewater, in St. Andrew's Church. She was prior to her marriage, the wife of Charles McLaughlin, a wealthy manufacturer, from whom she obtained a divorce on the statutory ground. She says she refused to accept any alimony from him, but did take $1,000 a year for the support of their only daughter, Edith.

Things went along in this way until she discovered, she alleges, a letter addressed to him, signed "Irene," and couched in most endearing terms. She says he at first said the letter was from a friend, but finally admitted he had been intimate with the woman and promised to drop her acquaintance. Portions of Mrs. Watt's complaint were stricken out by Justice Tamm on the ground that it was irrelevant and improper.

Mr. Watt is a member of the Harvard, Driving, Manhattan and American Yacht Clubs, and the "Ladies" Club. He was once Commodore of the American Yacht Club, was owner of the famous schooner Osprey, and subsequently purchased the fast steam yacht Golden Rod. His steam yacht, the American, which was built for a crew of fifty men, and cost $200,000, was a week to run, and it costs $2,000 a week to run her.

Wrote at Pistol's Point.

"In regard to the statements in the affidavit of the plaintiff," says Mr. Watt, "relating to a letter which she claimed to have been written to me and signed Irene, and in regard to my having, at the request of the plaintiff, written a letter to the writer of that letter, I can only say that the letter which I wrote was written by me from the dictation of the plaintiff at the point of a pistol."

Objects to a Clergyman. He says he objected to certain persons visiting the yacht who were entertained by the plaintiff after he had retired. He states that he saw a certain clergyman on two occasions on the yacht late in the evening.

"On one occasion," he continues, "some time after I had retired I awoke and summoned my man by bell, and asked him the lights were not turned out, and he replied that the said clergyman (mentioning his name) was in the dining hall with Mrs. Watt. I arose, put my bath robe on and went up the stairs leading to the dining hall, where I saw the said clergyman and Mrs. Watt. This was not earlier than 11 o'clock."

"On the other occasion I awoke about 1 o'clock at night, and seeing that the light had not been turned down, I arose and went part way up the companion way, and saw the plaintiff and said clergyman together in the social hall. I called to her, saying: 'Is not this pretty late?' The clergyman replied: 'Yes, I am just about leaving,' and I returned to my room. On neither of the occasions above named was the clergyman on the yacht when I retired at my usual hour, between 9:30 and 9 o'clock."

Stewardess a Witness. Counsel for Mr. Watt submitted an affidavit by Mattie S. Smallwood, the stewardess of the yacht American, who said she knew Mrs. Watt for twenty-one years.

"About three years ago I noticed," said the stewardess, "that a certain clergyman was in the habit of coming to the yacht frequently. After a while he only came when the Commodore was not there. I have gone with Mrs. Watt repeatedly and met the clergyman at various places off the yacht. As near as I can recollect the occurrences were substantially as follows: She would say to me, 'Mat, get ready; as soon as I have supper I want you to go out with me,' and then another time she would say to me: 'When the Commodore goes to bed I am going out and I want you to go with me.'"

"One night last fall we left the yacht, which was at the pier, after the Commodore had gone to bed, and took the trolley over to Madison avenue, and then to the station on the Hudson River Railroad."

"She walked to the door of the station and said: 'Here you come on,' and who should come out but said clergyman."

and she would come to the telephone and talk with him. A little later in the evening he would appear at the yacht, and she would entertain him and he would stay until late.

Mrs. Watt is described by Mrs. Smallwood as a woman of very high temper, who goes into fits of violent rage. She once saw a pistol in her hand when she was in a very violent passion, and the Commodore said she had drawn the pistol on him before.

"The next day," says Mrs. Smallwood, "she spoke to me about it, and she said the pistol was not loaded, but she made him write the letter to the Boston woman. She also said she kept the original and wrote another one and sent it to the Boston woman. She told me also that she had drawn a pistol on him before."

Here is the Irene letter. Mrs. Watt submits a copy of the following letter alleged to have been received by her husband from Mrs. Irene Rice.

"My Dear Archie: Yours received, and hasten to reply. We leave here 27th via Air Line train, arriving there just at 6. It is a five-hour train and a fine one. She goes like the devil through the office and I shall look for you at the station. Do not fail to meet me. It seems as if the time will never arrive when I can be with you and have a hug and a kiss and a long drink. Have not had any wine since last with you. We shall drink for the last time by all means. After you have read these letters destroy them, won't you? Today I had a tooth extracted and I feel very weak, but have suffered intensely with it, so had to succumb to extraction. I shall write you again Friday evening, and if I should not will surely Sunday. Keep up good courage and I will be with you to comfort you for at least four days. With it were to be longer."

"It has rained quite hard; snowed also today. It is quite wintry out. Saturday is the great Harvard and Yale football game at Cambridge. Are you betting? Do not on Yale, will you? Write me a nice letter; just one more before you see me. Just one week from tonight you will see me. With lots of love I am sincerely yours, Irene."

"I frequently did go out," the affidavit continues. "Of course the Court can readily understand that not having received any attention at the hands of my husband, I had to seek recreation in some way, and also had to pay my social duties, but I have never been to any improper place, and the insinuations made by the defendant and his witnesses in his affidavit are cruel and wicked."

"I am a pure and virtuous woman and have always been so."

LATIMER MYSTERY MAY BE SOLVED BY THIEF'S ARREST

"Sneak" Shoes and Cap Found in the Menett House, Long Island City, Fit Harry Clare, One of the Prisoners.

By the arrest of Harry Clare, alias Joseph Haas, Capt. Titus believes the Latimer murder mystery in Brooklyn may be cleared and that a gang of burglars, counterfeiters and swindlers who have been operating all over the country may be convicted.

Ernest Menet and his wife were arrested yesterday at No. 370 Buckley street, Long Island City. Two wagon loads of supposed stolen goods were taken away. Afterward Clare or Haas was taken into custody.

Then a more thorough search of the house was made. Letters were found which show that Clare had been running mingling schemes and engaging in discretionary pool operations.

More than one hundred and fifty letters were found, addressed to "Joseph Haas, No. 2818 Seventh avenue, Manhattan." All were written by a woman who signed herself "S— Hortense," and were dated Asbury Park, N. J.

In addition to this stuff the police found a complete counterfeit outfit, consisting of moulds, handpresses, white metal, furnace and everything to do work on a large scale. The Secret Service men have been notified and they will take a hand in the investigation. Hundreds of jewelry cases were found in the house.

CAPT. TITUS'S VIEWS. "We have no reason," said Capt. Titus, "to charge the Latimer murder to Clare or his companions, but with that mystery in mind several circumstances made it seem worth while to investigate Clare's case thoroughly. The two wagon loads of silverware and other articles found at the Menet house was all the proceeds of midnight burglaries. Then the search revealed two pairs of false whiskers and a mink hat. When we went further and measured Clare's feet and head we found that the cap and shoes which figured in the Latimer mystery would fit him to a nicety."

"Another fact discovered to-day was that a friend of Menet's had visited him on a bicycle and puncturing the wheel left it at Menet's house for a week about the first week in July. We found a considerable quantity of chloroform in the house."

"We turned the prisoners over to the Long Island City police because we had a minor case against them, while they are up against it very strong over there."

HELD FOR EXAMINATION. Clare, alias Haas, was arraigned before Magistrate Conorton, in the Long Island City Court to-day, under the name of John Smith on a charge of burglary. Attorney Glaze, of Kneeland, La. Poiré & Glaze, with offices in the New York Life Building, appeared for him. He was held without examination until Monday at the request of the detectives.

Lawyer Glaze said that his firm had known Clare under the name of Haye, and defended him several years ago when he stole gold bars from his employer. He was convicted and sentenced to five years in the Elmira Reformatory. According to Mr. Glaze he is an expert and one of the best in the business. He is the inventor of some chemical process for the refining of gold.
